T IS A FESTIVE EVENT to come across a book such as "The Prodigal Judge," written by Vaughan Kester.

This novel, which treats of American life of several decades ago, is wholly unlike anything else in recent fiction.

It glows with sturdy spirit and is so resolute and gladsome in its methods that at the very first page the reader is captured completely; and he is thereafter its most willing slave. - Philadelphia Record

Raleigh, N. C., July 14.—One engine was nearly demoilshed and another badly crippled this morning, when a Greensboro-Selma Southern freignt train plunged into Engine No. 462, standing on the main line in the yard limits here. Brakes of the freight failed to work. The engine that the train struck was backed rapidly on to the turn table, some distance back in the yards, and was shoved off it into the pit, several feet deep, a complete wreck. The freight engine was not very seriously injured. The train blocked the main lines of both Southern and the Seaboari for a short while. No one was injured.

Stopping of an Automobile.

New York, July 14.—A peculiar automobile accident to-day killed Arthur A. Dalely, a chauffeur, and injured Arthur Weisbecker, his employer, who was with him in the car. Unexpectedly seeing before him an excapation in the street, Daley suddenly shut off the power and applied the brakes. Immediately there was an explosion and a burst of flame, and both men were blown out of the machine.

Weisbecker will recover. The auto-mobile was destroyed by fire.
